

Chalmers Cards

Quality Information on Public Resources

Chalmers Cards is a guerrilla project that distributes laser-cut wooden information cards to people living in unstable housing conditions in Toronto. The cards explain how to access public resources like free legal aid and financial aid.

Chalmers Cards are laser-cut onto wood so the information doesn't get crumpled. People find the cards to be beautiful and pleasant smelling, and so keep the cards (and the information) on their person.

To save on cost of production, the cards are laser cut at maker spaces around Toronto. The cards are cut and distributed by volunteers. A single Chalmers Card has a material cost of eight cents.
